DIRECTORS NOTES

When selecting a musical for high school performers, there is often a temptation to choose what is familiar — titles that feel safe, recognizable, and predictable. Those shows have their place. But theatre education should also challenge, stretch, and surprise. Something Rotten! does exactly that. This musical is outrageous, intelligent, self-aware, and unapologetically theatrical. It asks young performers to juggle heightened language, rapid-fire comedy, layered references, complex harmonies, and sharp physical storytelling — all while maintaining emotional truth underneath the absurdity.

Producing a non-traditional high school musical is a statement. It says:

Our students are capable of sophisticated humor.

They can handle nuance and precision.

They can move beyond stock characters into deeply committed ensemble work.

They can celebrate theatre history while simultaneously poking fun at it.

At its heart, Something Rotten! is about insecurity, comparison, and the pressure to measure up — themes that resonate deeply with young artists and many directors (cough cough). Nick and Nigel Bottom aren't just Renaissance playwrights competing with Shakespeare; they are creators wrestling with doubt, ambition, ego, and the desire to matter. That feels very familiar. Choosing this show also allowed us to explore something important in arts education: risk. Not reckless risk — but creative risk. We ask our students to take risks every day:

To sing boldly.

To commit fully.

To make big physical choices.

To trust timing in comedy.

To fail, adjust, and try again.

Most importantly, it reminds us that musical theatre itself is gloriously ridiculous — and worth celebrating.

Thank you for supporting programs that push beyond the expected. When we allow young artists to tackle ambitious, non-traditional material, we are not just putting on a show — we are raising the bar for what high school theatre can be.

Break a leg,

Dustin Hebert

Director
